Imagine my surprise this morning as I picked up my stamps at the USPO and saw the public property inside covered with posters for Microsoft's latest version of their windows product. Not only that, but counters were covered with freebie demo CDs showing how wonderful their new product is.

Yet, there's nothing on display stating the truth that Microsoft's XP works ONLY with new PC hardware, that all older PCs cannot operate with this new product. Talk about lack of truth in advertising-- AND the USPS is helping!

As an American taxpayer, I really do not like the USPS giving their public property over to the same firm that is being investigated for so many antitrust activities both in the US and abroad.
